Excerpt: . the entire tract is estimated by going through it a sufficient number of times to see all the timber. To work to the best advantage, there should be two men--one to keep a straight line with the compass and to pace the distances and the other to estimate and tally the trees. This method is especially desirable in case of surveyed land, where the estimate should be made by forties. In ordinary practice it is usual to cross each forty four times, tallying by the strip method already described. It is better, however, to go through each block (in the case of surveyed land a quarter section) on lines not over 100 yards apart, making a halt at every 100 yards, and estimating the 100-yard square around this station. The figures for each square should be kept separate, and the location on the diagram will permit the averaging to be made for the entire block, or for each forty, as desired. The circle method first described should never be used in large timber, or where the trees stand far apart, since the area is too small to get a fair average of the number of trees on an acre. Estimates of all tracts, whether entire blocks or areas covered by applications, should be reduced to average acres and entered upon the blank form furnished for this purpose. The size of the tract is stated in the space at the top of the blank...
