I walked past him, ignoring his protest, and continued down the corridor. Enhance your calm, he chided, following closely after me. Calm? What is Calm? Can I smash it?! I demanded, stomping down the stairs of my entry hall where Lewis and Heather had just entered. Lewis turned as I approached him. PUNCH! He turned his head to the side at the blow. Ow, he replied simply, wiping a little blood from the corner of his mouth. I glared, breathing heavily, not entirely set on my plans for him - death by strangling or death by sword. I frowned, turning my attention to the figure commuting itself through the door. I narrowed my eyes irritably, recognizing it as James - my scout whom I d sent to find Lewis and Heather in the first place. Well? I demanded. Nothing, Sire, he replied. I returned my gaze to Lewis and Heather blandly, then back to the scout. Nothing . . ., I muttered, rubbing my forehead irritably, Not one thing. Jeremy, I...

Reviews

This publication is amazing. It is definitely basic but shocks in the fifty percent of your publication. You wont feel monotony at anytime of your own time (that's what catalogues are for concerning if you question me).
